

An internationally educated nurse from the Philippines, Romeo De Vera PhD, MSN, RN, CPAN is an experienced nurse for over 30 years with a well-rounded history working in the specialties in nursing education, critical care, medical-surgical nursing, and surgery/surgical specialties. He was a retired Nursing Education Specialist at Mayo Clinic Florida but his motivation in education landed him in his current role, as an adjunct faculty in nursing at Jacksonville University and University of North Florida.

Dr. DeVera finished his Doctor of Philosophy in Administration, Supervision and Educational Management from Philippine International Institute for Advanced Studies, Master of Science in Nursing from University of Phoenix, and Bachelor of Science in Nursing from Far Eastern University, Manila, Philippines. He is an Instructor of Nursing from Mayo Clinic which was granted in 2019 and holds certification in post-anesthesia care nursing.

He is active member of the Sigma Theta Tau International, held executive leadership positions as a member of the Philippine Nurses Association of America, the founding leader of the Filipino diversity group at Mayo Clinic Florida, and chaired several committees in various nursing organizations. Being actively involved in nursing organizations, he earned several awards in leadership, education, community service, and excellence awards in nursing. He is invited to speak in several nursing conferences here and abroad and his position in the ethical migration of foreign-educated nurses made him involved in their successful transitions. He is skilled as a mentor, as an adviser, and as a consultant.
